On Wednesday, August 22nd, “McDonald’s Corp. sent letters to the farmers who supply the company with 1.5 billion eggs yearly outlining strict new regulations for raising hens. The guidelines require 50 percent more space for each caged hen, ban the controversial practice of withholding food and water to increase egg production, and require a gradual phasing out of the “debeaking” that is common in the poultry industry.

“The move—the first of its kind by any major U.S. food supplier—was prompted by a combination of factors, including pressure from animal rights activists and growing concern among government and academic scientists that current methods of caring for chickens may increase the risk of diseases. . . . The action is the most far-reaching step in a trend that began in Europe and has recently begun to speak to the United States toward improving living conditions for all farm animals, for both ethical and public health reasons. . . .” (from The Washington Post)

Significance of the McDonald’s Action

United Poultry Concerns welcomes McDonald’s action. The company chose the deplorable treatment of hens by the egg industry as its first farmed animal welfare reform. In its letter to its U.S. egg company suppliers, McDonald’s announced: “Effective immediately, it will not support the practice of ‘beak trimming.’ To ensure compliance, McDonald’s told the egg companies it will audit them. McDonald’s Animal Welfare Guiding Principles states: “McDonald’s is committed to implementing an auditing system with our suppliers that ensures animal welfare compliance.”

McDonald’s’ action is important because it is the first time that a major U.S. food company has announced that the treatment of farmed animals merits attention in its own right. For the first time, the animals themselves have been declared to matter. Until now, if chickens and other farmed animals received attention it was likely to be framed strictly in terms of environmental or human health costs. The animals themselves have been ignored, even blamed, for the environmental and human health problems resulting from how they are treated. Ironically, McDonald’s has taken a stronger stand than some sectors of the vegetarian and animal welfare community. Sadly, it was McDonald’s rather than the American Veterinary Medical Association (AVMA), that took action on behalf of the morally abandoned and maltreated hens of the U.S. egg industry. Thus far the AVMA, which should have been a leader, has not even joined the parade, but instead has betrayed its oath “to use my scientific knowledge and skills for the benefit of society through the promotion of public health,
USDA AGREES TO REGULATE BIRDS, RATS & MICE UNDER THE ANIMAL WELFARE ACT – FINALLY!

It has taken the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) 36 years since the federal Animal Welfare Act (AWA) was passed in 1966, to extend regulatory oversight to birds, rats and mice. A successful lawsuit by the Alternatives Research & Development Foundation (ARDF) and an advocacy campaign by the American Anti-Vivisection Society (AAVS) resulted in USDA’s agreement in September to set standards for birds, rats and mice, affecting more than 20 million laboratory animals and nearly every biomedical research facility and educational institution in the U.S.

United Poultry Concerns has urged USDA since our inception in 1990 to fulfill its AWA mandate to cover birds, rats, and mice. To show how far things have progressed, here is a composite of replies we received from USDA in the mid 1990s: “In promulgating regulations and standards to enforce the AWA, we interpret the AWA as giving the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to exclude certain species, such as birds. In making this determination, we have responded to public sentiment. Mammals such as dogs, cats, and primates have captured public sentiment resulting in a public outcry against research procedures deemed ethically unsound. However, public sentiment has not been similarly shown on behalf of birds, rats, and mice. Therefore…”

The point is: Public Pressure Works. It’s the only thing that works. As noted by the AAVS which led the successful campaign, “The public is clearly behind this agreement.” This time around, 94% of over 40,000 letters to USDA urged coverage of birds, rats and mice. For more information contact AAVS: 215-887-0816.

United Poultry Concerns Adopts 25 Hens Rescued from Buckeye Egg Farm Disaster in Croton, Ohio

“They treat these hens abysmally. . . . It’s just that this particular nightmare has become visible.”
— Karen Davis, United Poultry Concerns, Columbus Dispatch, September 28, 2000

When a tornado hit Buckeye Egg Farm in Croton, Ohio on September 20th, over one million hens trapped in wire cages could not escape. Thousands of these hens have been rescued and continue to be rescued by farmed animal sanctuaries and volunteer activists across the country.

The Buckeye Egg Farm disaster struck just after United Poultry Concerns held the First Annual Forum in the United States on the Role Of Farmed Animal Sanctuaries in Promoting Animal Rights and Vegetarianism in Norfolk and Machipongo, Virginia, September 16th and 17th. When the disaster struck 3 days later, activist attendees and speakers from New York to California showed the power and commitment of the newest animal rights force in the U.S.: Farmed Animal Sanctuaries.

The majority of the Buckeye hens slowly starved to death in crushed, twisted metal among their dying and dead cagemates. Hundreds of thousands of the birds were dumped alive into trucks filled with carbon dioxide gas where they slowly suffocated.

At this writing (early October), the horror is still going on and efforts are in full swing to transport thousands of hens to loving homes around the country. Our next issue of PoultryPress will provide a fuller story of the rescue and of the rescuers, including pictures of the blessed hearts who made it to United Poultry Concerns’ sanctuary in Machipongo.

We take this moment to acknowledge the heroic rescues conducted by Ooh-Mah-Nee Farm in Hunker, PA, Farm Sanctuary in Watkins Glen, NY, Wilderness Ranch Sanctuary for Farm Animals in Loveland, CO, and to thank Ritchie Laymon of POET in Columbus, Ohio for all of her work, including hen rescue and media focus, throughout this tragedy. We urge everyone who has not yet done so, now is the time to please, Please, PLEASE remove eggs and egg products from your shopping list.

TURKEY VIGIL 2000
Please Join Us!

UPC activist Jamey West will hold our Third Annual Turkey Vigil in memory of the millions of turkeys who suffered and died needlessly this year.

Friday November 17th
7:30-8:30 PM
Atop the Bethesda Metro Station.
Bethesda, MD-Metropolitan Washington DC Area

Directions: Take Wisconsin Avenue (Rt 355) south from the Beltway 10 miles to the intersection of East West Highway & Wisconsin Avenue. Vigil will be on the right side of the street. Bethesda Metro is on the Red Line just a few stops north of DC.

The Bethesda Metro gets lots of people coming out of the Metro and walking to restaurants and bars in the area. Also, lots of auto traffic headed for Georgetown. We have banners, signs, brochures and candles. Just bring yourself and help get the message out: NO “BASTED IN BLOOD.” TURKEYS ARE FRIENDS, NOT FOOD.

Date: Wednesday,
November 22nd
Time: 1 PM to 3 PM
(time subject to change depending on White House announcement)
Place: White House Sidewalk

Action: UPC will hold a protest demonstration against the presidential “pardoning of a turkey” ceremony at the White House. Instead of “pardoning” innocent birds in false ceremonies of “compassion,” we will urge Americans to pioneer new traditions of respect and compassion for turkeys. Last year The Washington Post reported (Nov. 25), “United Poultry Concerns, a Washington-area group, [was] outside the White House to raise compassion for put-upon birds everywhere. Founder Karen Davis held one end of a banner that got to the heart of the matter: ‘Turkeys: Meet One, Don’t Eat One.’” protection of animal health, and the relief of animal suffering. Because of its ties to agribusiness and despite the fact that practicing veterinarians across the country have urged the association to adopt a policy opposing forced molting, the AVMA defends starving and debeaking chickens as well as caging them according to "current use," including confining each hen to 48 square inches—or less—of cage space for life.

By contrast, McDonald's has told its egg suppliers that each hen must now have 72 square inches of space instead of 48. While 72 square inches is not even close to the amount of space that a chicken needs, and while cages are completely unacceptable, McDonald's space requirement is the first concession by a major U.S. food corporation that a chicken's living space matters and that the egg industry has been cruel here as in its practice of starving birds and mutilating their beaks.

Animal Activist Pressure Produces Results

However, McDonald's portrays its progressive action, the fact is that animal rights pressure from European and Australian activists, the McDonald's campaign by PETA in the U.S., and the coordinated actions, campaigns, and behind-the-scenes sharing of research and information by PETA, United Poultry Concerns, the Association of Veterinarians for Animal Rights, and Dr. Steven Gross and the Illinois Humane PAC are responsible for the company's new hen welfare standards and for the siege that the egg industry is now under.

UPC members can take pride that the U.S. agribusiness newspaper Feedstuffs did an article about us on August 8th stating that "A recent campaign initiated by the activist group United Poultry Concerns generated more than 5,000 cards, letters and signed petitions to the offices of the United Egg Producers (UEP) in Atlanta, calling for the egg industry to discontinue its practice to force hens to molt. ... United Poultry Concerns president Dr. Karen Davis said the cards and letters should be considered 'a mandate' to cease forcing hens to molt through feed withdrawal and other means. . . ."

United Egg Producers "reported that, given mounting pressure to discontinue induced molting, including questions from government agencies, it has received a grant from the American Egg Board to conduct research into molting without feed withdrawal" (p. 8).

United Poultry Concerns, AVAR's Retailer Campaign Causes Industry Consternation

In its Washington Report Newsletter, August 7, 2000, United Egg Producers reported in "Molting Campaign Taken to Retailers": "United Poultry Concerns and the Association of Veterinarians for Animal Rights have taken their distorted campaign to the major retail chains. Their message speaks of the starvation imposed upon the hens as a result of induced molting and how this stress then contributes to a human food safety risk. The same organizations have called upon USDA/FSIS [U.S. Dept. of Agriculture] to continue enforcement of current cage size standards. . . ."

Poll Shows Most Americans Not Likely to Support Forced Molting, Crowded Caging of Hens

A poll conducted for Farm Sanctuary by Zogby America showed that 75.4 percent of respondents found it unacceptable to starve hens for over a week to force the hens to molt. The poll, conducted by phone, surveyed 1,204 adults across the country between September 15 and September 18. In addition, 86.2 percent of respondents said it is unacceptable to confine hens in wire cages so small and crowded they can't even stretch their wings. 80 percent of people polled said they would be willing to pay more for eggs from hens treated more humanely (less inhumanely).

The FreddaFlower Memorial Fund

Over the years, United Poultry Concerns has received many loving memorial contributions from our members on behalf of their beloved companion chickens, turkeys and ducks who have died. Starting in the next issue, with a donation to UPC of ten dollars or more, we will publish "In Loving Memory Of (your bird's name)," along with your name as the compassionate donor. If in the past you have sent us a donation in memory of a beloved bird, we will gladly include your memorial if you would kindly remind us, briefly, of your bird's name and species. The unexpected death of our dear, lively hen, FreddaFlower, on the morning of July 26th, prompted this Memorial Fund, which we've been thinking of adding to PoultryPress for a long time. We at United Poultry Concerns have watched so many of our beloved and fragile birds, rescued from horrible circumstances, die over the years . . .

Susan Rayfield wrote the following poem for our beautiful hen, Alice. Susan, a professional photographer who has taken many wonderful pictures of our chickens here at United Poultry Concerns, sent us her poem, To Alice, when FreddaFlower died. Alice and FreddaFlower both died in my arms, and I miss them.

— Karen Davis, Editor

To Alice

So many times
Choosing, buying, basting, seasoning, chewing, swallowing
Pieces of those like you

Here you come walking right to me
You come for comfort and company

Imagine that
After all those like me treated you cruelly
You still carry your heavy body to me
You reach out to me
You wriggle close to me
You wrap your head around my neck
You fall asleep in my arms

Wheezing and sighing heavily
Not made to breathe comfortably
But to be wrapped in cellophane for dinner tables

Thinking of these things
While I hold you
And you rest
Causes my cheeks to dampen

If only they could see you
And feel for you
And know you

When I started United Poultry Concerns a decade ago, one of our first members, Ruth Dahl of Minneapolis, Minnesota, sent me her well-thumbed copy of The Chicken Book, first published in 1975. Like me Ruth engaged in an impassioned dialogue with the book, underlining passages and writing in the margins. The Chicken Book invites a passionate response. Anyone who is interested in chickens and in the human relationship with the chicken, worldwide and historically, should buy and read this book.

The Chicken Book is not a happy book, but it is a fascinating one. It presents a jumble of messages including chicken and egg recipes. The two chapters devoted to cockfighting tell you a great deal about this activity, but if you expect Smith and Daniel, who oppose chicken factory farming, to oppose cockfighting, be warned. They show the cruelty, but their main criticism is directed at the "prigs" and "prudes" who historically have opposed cockfighting and sought to outlaw it. Of the British Parliament's decision to ban cockfighting in 1834, they claim, "No one was harmed by cockfighting except the reckless in their pocketbooks."

Cockfighting was, to be sure, a brutal sport, but this is a rather brutal world and it perhaps is not too much to suggest that the passion to reform it might have been directed at worther targets. (p. 96)

The authors state, and they show, that "There is an abundance of evidence that Western man's rages and lusts, however sublimated their forms, are fully as cruel as those to be found in other cultures" (p. 124). For some people, including the authors, humanity's cruel rages are defensible if they take a classical populist ceremonial form. But when the human rage for cruelty takes a modern industrial form their hackles rise. Smith and Daniel deserve credit for being among the first informative critics of chicken factory farming. They focus particularly on the battery-cage system of egg production. Compared to old-fashioned chicken-keeping, which was being converted to industrial production in the 1950s, "The rows upon rows of neat, clean birds, with their mutilated beaks, in the small cages, were like a glimpse into an Inferno as terrible in its own way as any of the circles of Dante's hell" (p. 287). Here Ruth Dahl cried out with her ballpoint pen, "And No One Cares and Helps Them!"

The Chicken Book describes the poultry genetics mania that began in the 1930s when the biologist John Kimber started Kimber Farms in Fremont, California. "It was his inspiration to apply the most modern discoveries in the rapidly expanding field of genetics to the breeding of chickens for specific purposes—meat or eggs" (pp. 270-271). Noting that the term "Farms" was a concession to popular sentiment, the book observes that the "efficient, white-gowned workers in the antiseptic laboratories of Kimber Farms had little time for sentiment. To them the baby chickens (half of whom were killed at birth and incinerated or fed to the hogs) hatched by the millions in their enormous incubators had to be seen primarily as items on an assembly line. The fact that they were alive was, it seems fair to suggest, incidental" (p. 272).

The Chicken Book has interesting chapters on the chicken in folklore and in "medicine"; the ancients used the testicles of cocks (the authors tell us the term "rooster" was coined by the prudish Victorians) to "treat" impotence and epilepsy, and "Pliny wrote that when a man suffered from chronic headaches a cock should be shut up and forced to abstain from food and water for several days, then its feathers should be plucked from its neck and bound around the patient's head along with the cock's comb" (p. 126).

The Chicken Book contains some of the best writing about chickens anywhere, including passages from Plutarch and the Italian Renaissance writer Ulisse Aldrovandi. Here, for example, is the authors' description of the birth of a chicken:

As each chick emerges from its shell in the dark cave of feathers underneath its mother, it lies for a time like any newborn creature, exhausted, naked, and extremely vulnerable. And as the mother may be taken as the epitome of motherhood, so the newborn chick may be taken as an archetypal representative of babies of all species, human and animal alike, just brought into the world. (p. 317)

The Chicken Book is an important part of the chicken's history. Though for some reason the photos of "a modern incubator" and "a modern chicken factory" are missing in the reprint, society's industrial curse on chickens is etched in words:

Chickens confined, and especially chickens confined in large numbers, like people confined in large numbers, are at their least appealing. In such circumstances, chickens, like people, give off offensive odors; disposing of their cumulative wastes becomes a major problem; they behave badly to each other, bedeviling and pecking each other in boredom and frustration; they become neurotic and susceptible to various diseases of the body and the spirit. This is what happened to chickens. (p. 272)

STOCK CONTRIBUTIONS

Dear Friends,

Several of our members have recently made financial contributions in the form of stock to United Poultry Concerns through our securities account. We are deeply grateful for these gifts, and anticipate more in the future. There are two obvious benefits in making stock contributions. Please consider these advantages in making your future gifts to United Poultry Concerns.

Donors may give stock up to and including $10,000 to a nonprofit organization without impinging upon their estate. By giving this way, they avoid paying a capital gains tax on their assets, because they are gifting their assets. The benefits to the nonprofit are obvious. In giving a gift of stock, you enable the nonprofit of your choice to grow and do more. It’s as simple and important as that. Everyone wins.

United Poultry Concerns has opened a securities account with Paine-Webber. For information on how you can donate to us this way, please call our financial advisor, Claudia Puopolo, at Paine-Webber at 757-490-5639 or 800-368-4070.

From United Poultry Concerns and all our Feathered Friends, we thank you for helping to ensure our future!

Sincerely,

UPC president Karen Davis published the following letter in TIME MAGAZINE, August 28, 2000, in response to Joel Stein, "My Chicken Run" (Aug. 7). He wrote about PETA, "They may not be able to distinguish animals from people, but they sure know how to have fun. Still, I wouldn't choose them over a heaping plate of Buffalo wings."

Getting To Know Chickens
Stein is to be commended for wearing a chicken costume as a first step to getting to know chickens better. Now I invite him to visit our chicken sanctuary on the Eastern Shore of Virginia in order to deepen his vicarious identification with the birds whose dead wings he still finds appetizing. I invite him to lay his hands on those very wings while they are still alive, feathered and flapping. And I will tell him precisely how Buffalo wings are made. I bet the next time he’s confronted with a heap of dead wings dressed in sauce, he will take flight.

Order From UPC The Most Powerful Video of Poultry Slaughter

HUMANE SLAUGHTER takes the viewer into poultry slaughterhouses to witness the horrendous suffering endured by chickens and turkeys. The video contains undercover footage obtained by Farm Sanctuary investigators of standard poultry slaughter operations, where terrified chickens and turkeys are slowly bled to death - sometimes on the slaughterhouse floor.

Scenes from HUMANE SLAUGHTER have prompted thousands of people to eliminate poultry from their diets. When you see this video you'll see why:

"Undercover footage [HUMANE SLAUGHTER] of a poultry slaughterhouse in Los Angeles shows chickens having their throats manually cut . . . and then being stuffed alive into bleeding holes in an idle manner by the employees. Blood-soaked chickens with partially cut throats try vainly to lift themselves out of the troughs into which more bleeding and writhing birds are casually flung before being picked up and shackled. Bleeding, flapping chickens fall off the line onto the floor - no one pays any attention."

Posters
A Heart Beats in Us the Same as in You
New full-color UPC poster vividly captures the truth about today's factory chickens for the public. Vegetarian message.
18" x 22".
$4 for 1 or 2 for $5

Today's chickens are forced to grow too big too fast. They're forced to live in filth. They go to slaughter with yellow pus, harmful bacteria, heart and lung disease, tumors, crippled legs, sick immune systems, and more. Millions of dollars are spent hiding these facts from you. Why put dead birds in your food anyway? Go vegetarian.
