Goli the guinea fowl joined our sanctuary in 2010. He lives in a snug enclosure with our golden rooster Reggie and two friendly beige colored hens who were rescued from a cockfighting ring named Maisie and Melandra. At night this little group of friends roosts together on a tree branch under the leaves. Goli has many interesting voices ranging from an ear-piercing machine-gun racket to the sweetest quiet singing in the evening, when he and his companions are settled down for the night.
Q. How did veganism become part of your life?

A. I grew up in a meat-eating household in Pennsylvania. Although I have always loved animals and hated animal cruelty, I ate animal products so unthinkingly that, while arguing with my father about hunting at the dinner table, it would be over a plate of dead animals who were invisible to me as beings who had once been alive and had died a horrible death. In the 1970s I read an essay by the Russian writer Leo Tolstoy called “The First Step,” in which he described his visits to Moscow slaughterhouses and argued that the first step toward a nonviolent life was to get the animal bloodshed out of your system. I stopped eating meat. Yet even after that, I was oblivious to the sources of dairy and eggs. I didn’t think “cow” or “chicken” while consuming those products. In the 1980s, Peter Singer’s book Animal Liberation, and The Cookbook for People Who Love Animals, published by Gentle World in Florida, opened my eyes to the animal suffering embodied in eggs and dairy products. One day, I sat in my car at an Italian restaurant in College Park, Maryland, bawling my eyes out because I could no longer have pizza with extra (or any!) cheese. Then I went inside, ate rigatoni, and never looked back.

Q. What advice would you give to a vegan advocate wanting to become more of an activist?

A. I would advise this person to get involved with one or more animal rights organizations and start acting! I think it’s important to expand one’s personal dietary ethic to a public outreach effort. The very word “advocate” means taking a public stand and making a case for what one cares about and wants to accomplish. United Poultry Concerns produces a range of handout brochures, posters, videos and other material for an activist to educate her/himself and others. Understandably, many people are shy about confronting the public. Learning to talk comfortably with people may take practice. There are many ways to advocate for a vegan diet and animal rights, and many channels of communication. One thing to keep in mind, however, is that people love Personal Stories. By framing your advocacy message in the form of a Personal Story of how you became aware of animal suffering, and what led you to change, you engage people’s interest without threatening them. You show people by example that it’s possible and liberating to change one’s habits into something new and better.

Q. What do you think makes veganism hard for people?

A. People regard meat – all animal products, but especially meat – as the most substantial food. The smell of roasted flesh is irresistible to most people. Throughout history, people around the world have celebrated victories, holidays, weddings, and other special occasions over a large roasted animal or several large animals on the table. Everything else – bread, condiments, vegetables – surrounds the meat whether in a sandwich or on the dinner table. People raised on meat are afraid if they stop eating it, they will be emotionally and nutritionally deprived. They fear they will not feel full anymore, psychologically or physically.

This is a legitimate fear since for most of us, whether alone or with family and friends, eating is one of the most important ways, if not the most important way to relax, relieve stress, and experience pure pleasure. To be confronted with the thought of having to turn the pure pleasure of eating and sharing meals into a tension-filled, nerve-wracking experience, adding to the stress of life instead of reducing it, daunts many people. They don’t want to have to explain to their friends why they’re not ordering lobster anymore, or why they’re asking the waiter if the pasta has eggs in it. They don’t want to turn the dinner table into a food fight with their family. These concerns make it hard for people to want to become vegan, even those who genuinely care about animals and want better health. Media advertising associates happiness, sex appeal, fun, family and friends with animal-based meals and dining enjoyment. TV ads say that children don’t like vegetables and will only eat them hidden in processed meat and dairy products. And though food is everywhere in our society, grabbing a tasty vegan meal at a fast-food restaurant or finding good vegan options at a better restaurant is still a challenge. All of these things make it hard for people to go vegan.

Q. What, in your opinion, is the most misunderstood idea about veganism?

A. That vegan food is not hearty. That eating vegan is not an emotionally satisfying experience. That vegan food is flavorless and lacking in calcium and protein. That you can’t grow big and strong and be athletic and have fun on just “lettuce.” That it’s “just vegetables.” Most people have no idea how delicious well-prepared vegan food is, because they’ve never had any.

Q. What one thing from your thinking in childhood do you wish you could change?

A. I wish that in childhood I had made the connection between meat and animals, but I didn’t. As I child, I didn’t think about animals in relation to eating.

Q. If you were to mentor a younger person today, what guidance might you offer?

A. I would encourage the younger person to eat a wholesome vegan diet and not gorge on potato chips and vegan junk food. I would encourage a person still living at home with parents who may not (yet) be vegan to be firm in their commitment and to educate themselves about vegan nutrition and share the information with their parents. I would encourage the person to offer to cook the family dinner once a week and to do everything possible to make being vegan an affirmative, pleasurable and fulfilling experience. I would encourage the person to be firm but friendly about their decision to be vegan, and never forget what animals go through in order to become “food” that nobody needs.

Q. Do you have a favorite vegan meal or food?

A. Although I grew up eating meat and liking it, when I decided to become vegetarian in the 1970s, I switched easily to pasta dishes. Pasta to this day is my favorite food – heaps of linguini with stir-fry mushrooms, spinach, broccoli florets and olives in marinara sauce or toasted sesame oil & tamari sauce. Dining out, I love Indian food, Italian, and Chinese. Some people say it’s difficult to be vegan while traveling, but there is almost always one or more of these restaurants nearby. Even if you happen to be at a restaurant without a single vegan menu option, you can still put together a vegan dinner based on what is there. Creativity and courage are important to being a successful vegan.

Q. What one thing makes veganism worthwhile for you?

A. I became vegan because I did not want animals to suffer and die for my appetite. Keeping faith with animals by respecting them and not eating them is the single most worthwhile decision I have ever made. For me, being vegan is the opposite of renunciation and “doing without.” It’s a totally positive, deeply satisfying diet and dietary decision.

Q. Any opinion on the future of veganism in today’s world?

A. There are so many forces at play, it’s hard to predict how well a vegan diet and lifestyle will fare in a world with an expanding human population already close to 7 billion people, a world in which analysts say that the number of animals raised for food is likely to double from 50 billion to 100 billion land animals, by 2050. This estimate doesn’t even include the megatons of fish people are eating and that are increasingly being factory-farmed in filthy, disease-filled aquaculture tanks. One thing is clear: there is no way that people can consume the number of animals and amounts of animal products that are being consumed in today’s world, and yet somehow, magically, eliminate factory farming. This is a pipedream. Even “free-range” and other animal farming practices and conditions that are represented as alternatives to industrial animal farming involve mass production of animals, breeding, shipping, slaughtering, culling, and mutilation. My opinion is that the future of veganism in the world depends upon going vegan, purchasing vegan food and other vegan products, building the vegan economy, and getting others to join you.

And there has been progress over the last twenty years, thanks to dedicated vegan-animal rights activists around the world. Even if we don’t succeed in changing the world, being vegan and an animal rights advocate is the right thing to do.

“For its part, the Humane Society agreed to give up on a push to ban cages entirely . . . and would agree not to conduct undercover investigations at large egg farms unless it was aware of especially egregious practices.” The New York Times, July 7, 2011

On July 7, 2011, The Humane Society of the United States announced an agreement with United Egg Producers, the egg industry trade group, to refrain from further state-based campaigns in favor of federal legislation that would create national welfare standards for the nation’s 280 million egg-laying hens. Proposed federal regulations would:

Replace barren battery cages over the next 18 years with “enriched” battery cages with slightly more space for the hens (ideally in some future fantasy up to one square foot for each caged hen) along with tiny perches and dustbathing areas; Prohibit forced molting of hens by food deprivation to manipulate egg production; Set toxic atmospheric ammonia level standards; Require egg cartons to inform shoppers of the housing system in which the hens who laid the eggs in those cartons lived, e.g. “eggs from caged hens,” “eggs from cage-free hens,” or “eggs from free-range hens”; Mandate “euthanasia” of “spent” hens (whatever that means in the context of agribusiness); Prohibit the sale of eggs and egg products that don’t meet these standards.

Many animal advocates fear that any effort to reform agribusiness practices will placate the public with illusions of “humane” treatment of farmed animals having no basis in the reality of actual production practices. They fear that advocacy for a compassionate vegan diet is undermined by campaigns that seek to mitigate some of the cruelest abuses of an inherently animal abusing industry. They fear that whatever welfare reforms are enacted into law will not be enforced regardless, and that all or most efforts to reform animal agribusiness are a betrayal of the animal victims and amount to deals with the devil. All of these fears are reasonable.

An additional reasonable fear in this particular case is that, should a federal law be enacted, it will be a diluted version of the initial proposals, and the battery cage, albeit “enriched” with tiny furniture including nestboxes that are actually just plastic strips, will be established. Once the U.S. egg industry invests a projected $4 billion dollars into converting to “enriched,” so-called “colony” cages, and those cages with their millions of tiny furnishings have been installed, that system will be firmly in place for the remainder of the 21st century, and probably far beyond.

Acceptance of cages for laying hens, however euphemistically “enriched,” is a HUGE STEP BACKWARD, in our opinion. Unfortunately, victories for organizations do not necessarily translate into victory for animals, and this is how we view the current deal. We dissent from the view that HSUS’s agreement with United Egg Producers is “a step in the right direction.” We will continue to educate our members and the public to understand that the only true way to animal welfare – to animals faring well – lies in eliminating the demand for animal products in favor of vegan food. We hope you will join us.

Activists End Live Bird Sales at San Francisco’s Farmers Markets!

Raymond Young Poultry and Bullfeathers Quail no longer welcome

For two years, San Francisco activists Andrew Zollman and Alex Felsinger, founders of LGBT Compassion, have been leading vigorous investigations and protests of live poultry sales at San Francisco’s Heart of the City Farmers Market. Now, they’ve won! As of May 27, 2011, Heart of the City, the company hired by San Francisco to run the Market, banned live bird vendors from San Francisco’s UN Plaza, also called the Civic Center, where for nearly two decades these vendors have been selling live chickens, quails and other birds, tied up in grocery bags for customers to take home and torture and butcher.

Frustrated by the refusal of both Heart of the City and the San Francisco District Attorney’s office to take action against the vendors for their atrocious animal cruelty and health code violations, LGBT Compassion filed a lawsuit with the California Superior Court against Heart of the City and Raymond Young Poultry, in January 2011, for the physical assaults and civil rights violations the activists personally experienced at the hands of the vendors during their peaceful protest demonstrations. The lawsuit got the attention of Heart of the City, and suddenly the ban was announced.

In their May 2 press release about their astonishing victory, LGBT Compassion stated that Raymond Young Poultry had been selling “over 1,000 factory-farmed birds twice weekly,” and estimated that Bullfeathers Quail had “bred and sold at least 350 birds each week at the market.” The ban will prevent the sale of over 100,000 live birds for food each year, the press release said.

In 2009, United Poultry Concerns joined forces with LGBT Compassion by posting frequent action alerts about the campaign and co-developing an information brochure, “What’s wrong with live chickens at farmers markets?” This brochure, in English, was translated into Chinese by UPC Vice President, Liqin Cao.

The San Francisco activists are now focusing their attention on the Richmond, CA farmers market, which they say is the last known Bay Area farmers market to continue to allow live bird sales. Though the Richmond poultry vendor is currently under investigation by Contra Costa Animal Services for animal cruelty, the Richmond City Manager’s office has so far refused to enforce the law, but the activists are making progress, notwithstanding. The Richmond City Manager and live bird vendor “are really freaked out about our protesting there, but the police understand our rights,” Zollman told UPC, noting that Animal Services seems “very concerned and Health Services has been responsive to our complaints.”

Meanwhile, Raymond Young Poultry has taken to selling birds illegally out of a pickup truck on the streets near UN Plaza. LGBT Compassion is documenting their law-breaking and presenting it to the police and to the news media, which have covered the activists’ campaign extensively.

More good news. Having ousted the live bird sellers, the San Francisco farmers market’s first new vendor is – a Hummus vendor! Says Zollman rejoicingly, “They’re replacing animal cruelty and filth with vegan food!” For more information and updates about this campaign and other efforts against live poultry markets, please visit www.upc-online.org/livemarkets/.
On April 14, 2011, the Florida Department of Education denied the formal Petition for Agency Action filed in March by United Poultry Concerns and Humane Educators Reaching Out. Prepared by animal law attorney Adam P. Karp, the Petition requested the Department of Education to develop and enforce specific rules implementing Florida’s humane education laws.

Our Petition was prompted by a highly publicized cruelty episode at Hawthorne High School in Alachua County, Florida near Gainesville, on April 15, 2009. On that day, two Hawthorne students, Robert Gordon and Patrick Dougan, bashed a live chicken to the ground for fun, videotaped the episode, and posted it on the Internet. The police report that followed included a description of the horrific killings that were meanwhile being conducted inside the school, under the direction of Future Farmers of America teacher Allen Shaw, who students said “had his back turned” while they were decapitating live birds, “popping” their necks, and exercising their cruelty. Shaw reportedly was teaching his students the neck “popping” (cervical dislocation) killing technique, and everyone was throwing the suffering, mutilated chickens into buckets where they struggled until they died.

Although Dougan and Gordon were arrested and charged with felony animal cruelty, and UPC president Karen Davis was set to testify at their trial, the charges were subsequently dropped by the Florida State Attorney’s Office.

Thereafter, UPC engaged attorney Adam P. Karp to prepare and submit the 79-page Petition for Agency Action (or Rulemaking), which was denied by the Florida Department of Education, claiming these reasons:

1) The Petitioners UPC and HERO have No Standing. “No Standing” is a frequently invoked legal blockage in animal cruelty cases whereby petitioners are said to lack “substantial interest in the rule requested” and to have failed to demonstrate that they themselves “have suffered an injury of the type the Petition is designed to protect.”

2) Current Florida Laws Prohibit Animal Cruelty. However, in this case and countless others, these laws did not punish the perpetrators for animal cruelty, nor does this law prevent the Department of Education from developing its own legal mandates and penalties to ensure that animal cruelty does not take place in Florida’s public schools.

As Adam Karp wrote following the Commissioner’s Order of Rejection: “What the Commissioner ignores is that even without the Hawthorne High video of cruelty, the entire classroom exercise violates state law prohibiting dissection/vivisection in the schools.” The department also claimed that the chicken abuse at Hawthorne High School happened two years earlier and was therefore too remote in time for review, which is ridiculous and basically boils down to: they didn’t want to bother.

At this writing, United Poultry Concerns has filed Freedom of Information Act requests with the Alachua County Superintendent of Public Schools and the Principal of Hawthorne High School for all records relating to courses past, present and future in which chickens or other animals were, are, or will be intentionally injured or killed by students and/or their teachers including any or all documents authorizing a “broiler” chicken class or similar animal-killing/injury class in 2012. The records we receive will determine our future course of action.

What Can I Do?

Although the Florida Department of Education rejected our Petition, they now know that many people care and are watching. We thank our supporters for the hundreds of emails and hand-written letters you’ve already sent to the department and related agencies about this matter. We encourage you to continue to express your opposition to students being instructed to injure and kill animals in Florida’s public schools. Let the Florida Department of Education know how disappointed you are in their refusal to establish clear regulations implementing Florida’s humane education laws, which the department has the authority to do. Ask what exactly they intend to do to insure that Florida students – and their teachers – are being taught to respect and protect chickens and other animals instead of hurting and killing animals and exercising their violent and abusive tendencies behind a mask of “agriculture.” Request a written response to your concerns. We thank those people who have contributed to our work with recent donations In Loving Memory and in Honor and Appreciation of the following beloved family members and friends:

In memory of Junior Rooster. Although your death was mysterious, I’m thankful that it seems to have been peaceful. Rest in peace, dear friend. – Jennifer Lasky Russell

For Joey, my Little Rooster, my Little Man. . . . My rainbow of earthly colors and the golden sunshine of my eye. It has been so hard losing you . . . Michele Nash

In memory of a calf I call Govinda. He managed to escape from the slaughterhouse, but they tracked him down and riddled him with bullets. Govinda lay on the ground in agony. He tried to lift his leg up a few times, but then he lay still. They tied his body to a rope and tied the other end to a truck. Then they dragged him away. If only I could have saved him. – Aleksei Green

My donation is in memory of Linny and Maxine, the two hens who were brutally strangled to death by three high school students at El Monte Elementary School in Concord, CA. – Madelaine Burgess

In loving memory of Fred and Gabby. – F. Goldman

In honor of Nero, Fredericka, Julie, Nathaniel, Leonard, and Bertha, remembered forever and forever missed. – Paul Deane

My gift is in honor of All God’s Creatures. – Brien Comerford

In memory of our dear little rooster, Mr. Frizzle, who died of a respiratory infection that had plagued him off and on ever since we adopted him five years ago. In the past we treated him successfully with antibiotics, but this time our precious bird did not pull through but died quietly during the night of April 3rd. Mr. Frizzle was a cheerful friend to everyone who knew him and his spirit will live on at United Poultry Concerns in his loving sanctuary home. – UPC

Katie--My Favorite Memories of Her

On Monday, May 30, a very special chicken died. Her name was Katie. She was brought to Safe Haven three years ago by a young couple who had purchased her at a live bird market. They wanted Katie to be their pet but their landlord objected, so they asked us if we would take her in. Right away we noticed how the other chickens liked being near Katie, and how she often tried to protect them.

One day we had to give medicine to Katie and a bantam rooster named Burdock. Katie didn’t like being held to have the medicine put in her mouth, but she let us do it. But when we tried to treat Burdock, he squawked loudly and flew away every time we got close. Finally he flew up against a fence, trapped. At that moment Katie ran over to Burdock and put her body in our way. Clearly she was trying to defend her friend.

Some of my other memories are of Katie and two partridges who had escaped a nearby hunting club and moved voluntarily into Katie’s aviary. They were always shy, but soon they began sleeping on the roost snuggled up to Katie. They also ran over to Katie whenever they were frightened, burying their small heads in her feathers for protection.

One day one of these partridges wandered outside... the aviary and seemed afraid to reenter because of my presence next to the screen door. Katie walked out of the aviary, approached the partridge, then walked back into the aviary. The little partridge followed her back inside.

Katie’s most surprising behavior happened one afternoon when I was upset about a personal matter. I felt a little like crying as I entered the aviary. Katie walked toward me, looked into my eyes, then sat down quietly beside my leg. I felt sure she was trying to comfort me. We often hear the term “mother hen,” but until that moment, I never knew how caring and protective a hen can be. All of us at Safe Haven miss our dear Katie very much. – Bill Crain

STOCK CONTRIBUTIONS

Dear Friends,

Several of our members have made financial contributions in the form of stock to United Poultry Concerns through our securities account. We are deeply grateful for these gifts, and anticipate more in the future. There are two obvious benefits in making stock contributions. Please consider these advantages in making your future gifts to United Poultry Concerns.

Donors may give as much stock as they want to a nonprofit organization without impinging upon their estate. By giving this way, they avoid paying a capital gains tax on their assets, because they are gifting their assets.

The benefits to the nonprofit are obvious. In giving a gift of stock, you enable the nonprofit of your choice to grow and do more. It’s as simple and important as that. Everyone wins.

United Poultry Concerns has a securities account with UBS Investment Center.

For information on how you can donate to us this way, please call 877-827-7870, and a member of the UBS Advisory Team will help you. You may ask to speak directly with Rachel Tomblin or Earl Singletary.

From United Poultry Concerns and all our Feathered Friends, we thank you for helping to ensure our future!

Sincerely,
Karen Davis, Ph.D., President

United Poultry Concerns holds that the treatment of chickens, turkeys, ducks and other domestic fowl in the areas of food production, science, education, entertainment, and human companionship situations has a significant effect upon human, animal, and environmental welfare. We seek to make the public aware of the ways poultry are used, and to promote the compassionate and respectful treatment of these birds and the benefits of a vegan diet and lifestyle. UPC conducts full-time educational programs and campaigns through our quarterly magazine Poultry Press, our Website at www.UPC-online.org, and our chicken sanctuary in Machipongo, Virginia.

United Poultry Concerns maintains a permanent full-time office, sanctuary and education center at our headquarters at 12325 Seaside Road, Machipongo, Virginia 23405. We respond daily to Internet and telephone requests for help with bird-care problems, student projects, alternatives to classroom chick-hatching projects, and numerous other communications on the care, treatment and abuse of domestic fowl. We are grateful to all of our members and supporters for enabling us to fulfill our mission in 2010. From all of us at United Poultry Concerns, thank you for support!

Highlights of Our Activities and Accomplishments in 2010

Sanctuary Adoptions – UPC adopted 23 wonderful chickens including five roosters and also one guinea fowl in need of a loving home in 2010. All of our birds were rescued from abuse, abandonment or surrender by previous owners directly or through an animal shelter.

Nut French Toast

Dear UPC, I am a member and here is one of my favorite recipes for Poultry Press. It appears in my gourmet vegan cookbook Cooking With Compassion. I hope you can use it in your Vegan Recipe Corner. – Barbara Bonsignore

Ingredients:

1 ½ cups water
1 ¼ cups raw cashews or other nuts
1 teaspoon tamari or soy sauce
2 tablespoons whole wheat pastry flour
4 to 6 slices wholegrain bread
1 teaspoon vanilla, almond or orange extract
Add cinnamon to taste

Directions:

Blend all ingredients except bread and cinnamon in a blender. Dip 4 to 6 slices of wholegrain bread in batter (keep stirring the batter). Sprinkle with cinnamon. Bake in the oven at 350 degrees on a well oiled cookie sheet until both sides are lightly brown, approximately 10 minutes per side, turning once. Sprinkle with more cinnamon. Serve with real maple syrup and/or fruit topping.

Fruit Topping

Ingredients:

3 ripe bananas
1 peeled quartered orange (seeds removed)
Juice of one lemon
½ cup raisins
½ cup boiling water

Directions:

BOOKS & BOOKLETS

Prisoned Chickens, Poisoned Eggs: An Inside Look at the Modern Poultry Industry
By Karen Davis
This newly revised edition of Prisoned Chickens, Poisoned Eggs looks at avian influenza, food poisoning, chicken suffering, genetic engineering, and the growth of chicken rights activism since the 1990s. Presents a compelling argument for a compassionate plant-based cuisine. “Riveting . . . Brilliant.”
– Choice magazine, American Library Association
$14.95. 40% off bulk orders of 5 ($8.97 each) = $44.85 for 5.

The Holocaust and the Henmaid’s Tale: A Case for Comparing Atrocities
By Karen Davis
In this thoughtful and thought-provoking contribution to the study of animals and the Holocaust, Karen Davis makes the case that significant parallels can—and must—be drawn between the Holocaust and the institutionalized abuse of billions of animals on factory farms. “Compelling and convincing . . . this bold, brave book.” – Charles Patterson, author of Eternal Treblinka
$14.95

More Than a Meal: The Turkey in History, Myth, Ritual, and Reality
By Karen Davis
Karen Davis shows how turkeys in the wild have complex lives and family units, and how they were an integral part of Native American and continental cultures and landscape before the Europeans arrived, while drawing larger conclusions about our paradoxical relationship with turkeys, all birds and other animals including other human beings. “The turkey’s historical disfigurement is starkly depicted by Karen Davis in ‘More Than a Meal.’” – The New Yorker
$14.95

Instead of Chicken, Instead of Turkey: A Poultryless “Poultry” Potpourri
By Karen Davis
This delightful vegan cookbook by United Poultry Concerns features homestyle, ethnic, and exotic recipes that duplicate and convert a variety of poultry and egg dishes. Includes artwork, poems, and illuminating passages showing chickens and turkeys in an appreciative light. $14.95

Animals and Women: Feminist Theoretical Explorations
Edited by Carol J. Adams & Josephine Donovan
“Karen Davis’s brilliant essay [Thinking Like a Chicken: Farm Animals and The Feminine Connection] brings together the book’s central concepts, leading to conclusions that rightly should disturb feminists and animal advocates alike.” – Review by Deborah Tanzer, Ph.D. in The Animals’ Agenda. $16.95

Ninety-Five: Meeting America’s Farmed Animals in Stories and Photographs
An anthology of photos and stories by No Voice Unheard
Editors: Marilee Geyer, Diane Leigh and Windi Wojdak. $20

Replacing Eggs
By United Poultry Concerns
Sick of salmonella? Our exciting booklet invites you to cook and eat happily without eggs! 21 delicious recipes. $1.50

This wonderful children's book tells the touching story of a little girl, a chicken, and a school hatching project. Beautifully illustrated by Patricia Vandenbergh, it's the perfect gift for a child, parents, teachers, your local library. $4.95

Animal Place: Where Magical Things Happen
By Kim Sturla
Enchant young children with this charming tale about a stubborn girl who is secretly touched by a cow while visiting a sanctuary for farm animals. $10

Goosie's Story
By Louise Van Der Merwe
A touching story about a “battery” hen who is given a chance to lead a normal life — a happy life. This moving book will be warmly welcomed and shared by children, parents and teachers, highlighting as it does the concern and compassion we ought to feel for all our feathered friends on this earth. $4.95

A Boy, A Chicken and The Lion of Judah – How Ari Became a Vegetarian
By Roberta Kalechofsky
This wonderfully gifted children's story, set in modern Israel, is about a young boy's quest for moral independence. An intelligent book for all ages. Winner of the Fund for Animals “Kind Writers Make Kind Readers Award.” $10

Minny's Dream
By Clare Druce
What happens when a young girl from the city discovers a battery-hen operation in the country? What happens when a “battery hen” named Minny speaks to her? What must she do when her friend Minny is going to be killed? This book is a must for the young person(s) in your life, age 8-14. $10

Nature's Chicken, The Story of Today's Chicken Farms
By Nigel Burroughs
With wry humor, this unique children's storybook traces the development of today's chicken and egg factory farming in a perfect blend of entertainment and instruction. Wonderful illustrations. Promotes compassion and respect for chickens. $4.95

When the Chickens Went on Strike
By Erica Silverman and illustrated by Matthew Trueman.
One day during Rosh Hashanah — the beginning of the Jewish New Year — a boy overhears the chickens in his village plan a strike. They are sick of being used for Kapores, the custom practiced in his Russian village where live chickens are waved over everyone's heads to erase their bad deeds. “An end to Kapores!” the chickens chant as they flee the town.

This enchanting book is adapted from a story by Sholom Aleichem, the great Yiddish author best known for his tales which are the basis of the internationally acclaimed play Fiddler on the Roof. $10
A Chicken’s Life! Grades 4-6
PETAkids Comics
This cute comic book illustrates a group of children visiting an animal sanctuary where they meet a flock of chickens and learn all about them including the differences between Nature’s Way and The Factory Farm Way. “Are these chickens really your friends?” they ask. “I’ve never met a chicken before.” A Chicken’s Life includes a puzzle for elementary school students to unscramble words including barn, beak, cluck, feathers, grass, hatch, peck, peep, wings, and lots more. $1.50 each. 10 for $10.
